

WEEKLY MARKET PRICE

11-2025

- After a prolonged downturn, cotton prices have shown signs of bottoming out in the past week. The recent depreciation of the US dollar is expected to support US commodity exports, including cotton, providing a much-needed boost to international prices.
- The Chinese fiber and yarn market remained under pressure over the past week, with prices of most categories either stabilizing or experiencing minor fluctuations.
- The Indian fiber and yarn market witnessed modest movements in prices over the past week. The outlook for the coming weeks remains uncertain, with fiber costs showing signs of stability while yarn demand remains constrained.
- Cotton yarn prices in Pakistan fell further last week, influenced by weakening demand and declining cotton fiber prices.
- This week, international cotton yarn markets reflected ongoing softness, primarily driven by declining cotton futures, subdued global demand, and cautious buyer sentiment.
- Polyester prices continued their downward trajectory over the past week, largely influenced by declining crude oil and intermediate raw material prices, particularly purified terephthalic acid (PTA).
