

WEEKLY MARKET PRICE 19-2025

- This past week, the international cotton market was stable, due to support offered by New York futures. The expiring May contract on the ICE exchange surged by nearly 5% to 70.18 US cents per pound, while other contracts like key July posted slight declines or remained steady.
- India's cotton yarn export market showed signs of stabilization this week. After a robust price surge in April driven by rising cotton costs and improved global demand, prices have largely flattened.
- Pakistan's export prices remained under pressure, especially for carded yarns, which fell around 0.7 to 1 percent this week and dropped as much as 6 percent over the past month.
- China's cotton yarn import market remained quiet, with prices holding steady or slipping only marginally. Imports from major suppliers such as India, Pakistan, and Vietnam showed little change, reflecting the lack of urgency among Chinese buyers to rebuild stocks.
- Over the weekend, crude oil markets experienced a sharp decline after OPEC+ members, especially Saudi Arabia, signaled a willingness to increase supplies. However, this price drop was short-lived, and oil partially rebounded at the start of the week. This volatility had a moderate impact on the polyester chain.
